I started the morning in the Metropolitan Club barber shop, [redacted] then went to the office.

This afternoon I called on Cabot Lodge at his house and for an hour and a half talked to him about pending problems in the State Department. He took notes, and I left some documents with him and arranged for a continuing liaison in his representation of General Eisenhower.

Tonight we went to dinner with Mott Belin. There were [redacted] many old friends there. He was entertaining for the Norman Armours.
